Class Committee

EDWARD JOSIAH DIVES

ROBERT GRANT, JR.

DANIEL ALLERTON NEWHALL

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CLASS OF 1906:

I submit to you, rather later than I had hoped, our first Class Report. This contains the history of our class while in college, statistics made up from the "class lives," and other matter related to our undergraduate life at Harvard. In addition, the report contains a list of the present addresses and occupations of our classmates so far as they are known to the Secretary.

The exact form of the report, which might perhaps have been improved by laying more stress on some parts and less on others, is due to the fact that a Class Report is merely one of a long series of reports from all the Classes. Consequently it seems best to follow the precedent of previous reports in order that the statistical data may be uniform. The value of the reports, however, depends on their completeness. This can be attained only through the co-operation of all the members of the class in responding to the letters of the Secretary and in taking the initiative in volunteering facts about themselves.

Let me thank those members of the class who responded promptly to my letters. To their interest the success of the report is due. Our thanks are also due to the editors of the undergraduate papers for the use of their files; to the secretaries of the clubs; to the graduates and undergraduates who have assisted in the preparation of this report; and especially to the members of the College Office, whose unfailing kindness and interest have made possible a complete and accurate use of the College Records.

Sincerely yours,

NICHOLAS KELLEY.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

TO THE CLASS OF 1906

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

THE COMING AGE ¹

BY LYMAN ABBOTT

THERE are three types of social order radically inconsistent. They are, respectively, paternalism, individualism, fraternalism. Each of these types of social order is defined tersely in the Bible. The definition of paternalism is found in Exodus xviii. 21, in the advice of Jethro to Moses: "Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens." This is not an inapt description of the ideal of social order which was entertained in the Middle Ages. The actual differed very much from the ideal; but the ideal was that a few able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, should be the rulers. The few were to govern, the many were to be governed. In the State these men were selected by a process of heredity. The sons of kings were supposed to be men of royal character; the sons of nobles, men of noble character. In industry the same process was relied upon. The feudal lords owned the land and protected their vassals. The vassals rendered service to the feudal lords in return for the protection. The relation between them was that of master and man. In the church the best men were selected by a process of ecclesiastical appointment. But alike in church, in industry, and in State, the notion was that a few best men should be selected to govern, and that the many, who were as children, were born to be governed. The few were booted and spurred to ride, the many were saddled and bridled to be ridden.

In the sphere of religion it was assumed that the many were incompetent to solve either the great problems of theology or the lesser and in some respects more difficult problems of casuistry. No right of private judgment was recognized in the layman, little or none in the lower order of the clergy. The divinely inspired church was to do the thinking. The common people were to accept the results of that thinking and yield to the church implicit obedience. They were to go to the sanctuary and learn from the pulpit the truths respecting God and the eternal world; they were to go to the confessional and learn from the priest their duties in the ordinary vocations of life. In the realm of industry the common people were to render the service required of them. They owned no land which they could till, and no tools with which they could till it. They could hardly be said to own themselves. The proceeds of their industry were taken from them in rents and taxes, and expended theoretically for them by their feudal lords or by the king, as the earnings of children are expended for them by their parents. In the political realm it was assumed that the people were without intelligence to understand the problems of government. In the government, therefore, they had no share. The family was the type followed — but with this radical difference: in the family the true father governs his child with the purpose of making him eventually self-governing. In the paternal governments of the Middle Ages the king governed the people, but with no conception that this government was to prepare the people for eventual self-government.

It is not necessary for my purpose to summon history to bear its witness against this system. Taine's "Ancient Régime" gives a graphic description of its effect in France.

Mr. Gladstone, in his "Letters to the Earl of Aberdeen," has portrayed its workings in Italy. Henry Charles Lea, in his "History of the Inquisition," has shown some of its effects in Spain. Its effects in England were greatly modified by the free spirit of the people. But even in England it produced the tyranny of a Laud in the church and of an Earl of Strafford in the State, and both in England and upon the Continent the results of paternalism became so unbearable as to lead at last to what seemed a desperate but what proved to be a successful revolt.

As the result of the Puritan revolution in England in the seventeenth century and of the Napoleonic revolution in the eighteenth, the power of autocracy was broken, and for the English-speaking people forever destroyed. The colonists in America, whether Puritans in New England, Cavaliers in Virginia, or Huguenots in the Carolinas, came hither to initiate a new experiment. They had learned in the school of experience that it is impossible to select a few able men, such as fear God — men of truth, hating covetousness — to make them rulers of the many. Government, as they had experienced it, whether in church or in State, had been despotic and oppressive, and they desired to reduce government to its lowest terms. In individual liberty they believed that they had found the solvent of social difficulties, the panacea for social disease. They determined to establish a State without a king; and, with the exception of the Roman Catholics in Delaware and the Cavaliers in Virginia, they desired a church without a bishop. Even where the bishopric was retained, it was a democratic, not an autocratic, office — a ministry for the people, not a mastery over them. On the whole, it may fairly be said that the description in Judges xxi. 25 of the colonial period in Israel is not an inapt description of the colonial ideal in America — "In those days there was no king in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes."

This ideal was worked out in the American Revolution, and in the time immediately following it, with a fair degree of consistency. In the political realm government was regarded as a necessary evil; the less of it the better. Its sole function was deemed to be a twofold protection—the protection of the nation from other nations, the protection of each individual in the nation from wrongs threatened by other individuals. This protection afforded, each individual was to be left free to do what was right in his own eyes. In the industrial realm slavery remained a relic inherited from the past. The fathers of the Republic endured but did not defend it, and hoped that it would die of its own inherent weakness. With the exception of slavery, frankly recognized as an anomaly, industry was emancipated. The philosophy of Jeremy Bentham became the dominant industrial philosophy. This may be roughly defined by the two words “free competition.” More fully defined, it may be described thus: Self-interest is the inspiration of industry. Leave all men unhampered to struggle each for his own interests. In free competition each man will get that to which his ability entitles him. Thus a rude though imperfect industrial justice will be secured. In the religious realm the right of private judgment was substituted for the doctrine of submission to authority. Religion, it was said, is purely an individual matter between each soul and its God. Each soul must therefore be left to settle this matter for itself. Each individual must be free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, or not to worship at all if he so prefers. The old attempt to secure unity of faith and worship by obedience to one head of the church was abandoned. No attempt was made to find any other basis for unity either of faith or of worship.

This experiment of individualism has been tried for a century. It has not fulfilled the promises of its prophets. Experience has proved that intelligent self-interest and a careless disregard of the interests of others can never be made the parents of a well-ordered industrial system. Philanthropy has revolted at the intolerable wretchedness which has been inflicted upon the poorer and the weaker by the doctrine that industry is a struggle for existence and a survival of the fittest. The invention of machinery and the accompanying and not less important invention of the division of labor have put an end to pure individualism in industry; have compelled co-operation and combination; have created corporations and combinations of corporations — that is, trusts. Labor, finding itself the helpless servant of capital if capital is organized and labor is not, has entered into combinations, sometimes to defend itself from the aggressions of capital, sometimes to make aggressions upon capital, but always avowing as its principle the unindividualistic motto, An injury to one is an injury to all, and a benefit to one is a benefit to all. The church has learned that religion is not merely an individual matter between the soul and its God, that it is as truly a matter between each individual and every other individual. Thus we are gradually learning that the individualism in which every man does what is right in his own eyes is not the ultimate form of society; that there is something beyond; that this something is a social order in which a community of interest is recognized and a community of life is maintained; an order the ideal of which Christ sets before his disciples in the saying reported in Matthew xxiii. 10: "One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren."

Roughly speaking, it may be said that the form of society in the eighteenth century was paternalism; in the nineteenth century, individualism; in the twentieth century it is already beginning to be fraternalism.

An age in which government protects the nation from other nations, and the individual within the nation from the wrongdoing of other individuals, and leaves each individual to do as seems right in his own eyes, is a great improvement on the age in which a few are selected by a natural process of inheritance to rule over the rest. But there is something better in the political realm than this night-watchman's theory of government. The State is an entity. The State has a corporate interest which is something more than the mere aggregation of the interests of the separate individuals in the State. Public spirit recognizes and serves this public interest sometimes at individual self-sacrifice. The State owes a corporate duty to other States; a duty which is something else than the mere aggregation of the individual duties of the individual citizens that constitute the State. The nation may be under an obligation to intervene to prevent the massacre of the Armenians in Turkey, the monstrous maltreatment of the natives in the Congo, the oppression of the Cubans by Spain. There is or ought to be a national conscience which recognizes these national obligations and to which appeal can be made to enforce them. The State has a corporate intelligence expressed in public opinion. This public opinion is created by the interchange of the opinions of many individuals, but it is a corporate opinion and concerns itself with the interests and the duties of the State. Such a public opinion is possible only when each individual considers the interests of other individuals as well as his own interests, and respects and will pay heed to the opinions of others. The State has a corporate will which is formulated in public law and issues in public action. This law is the resolve of the State; the consequent action is the action of the State. Thus the State, composed of brothers who regard one another's interests, respect one another's opinions, and co-operate in action for the common welfare, is a PERSON, which thinks and feels, and wills and acts. This conception of the State is far different from that paternal conception of the State to which Hamilton inclined; it is far different from that individualistic conception of the State which Thomas Jefferson advocated; it is far better and higher than either.

There are belated men in our time who regard democracy as a failure and desire to go back to the paternalism of the past. There are other belated men who are practically endeavoring to do so by substituting a bureaucratic for a democratic government — the rule of the boss and of the machine for the rule of the people. They would select a few men to rule over the many, but they differ from Jethro in his counsel to Moses, because they do not select able men, or such as fear God, or men of truth, or those who hate covetousness. More in number than these advocates of a return to a real or a pseudo paternalism are those who still linger in the age of individualism. The dread of autocratic government which was reasonable in their fathers haunts the sons, though the reason for it has long since passed away. They fear any extension of governmental power and any enlargement of its administrative functions. They confound democracy with individualism. The only democracy they know is a social order in which there is no king and every one does what is right in his own eyes.

But the social order of the future is neither that of paternalism nor that of individualism, but that of fraternalism. It is neither that in which a few will rule over and supposedly care for the interests of the many; nor that in which each individual will take care of his own interests regardless of the interests of his neighbor, on the hypothesis that so the interests of all will be well taken care of. It will be a social order in which each member of society will recognize that the interest of one is the interest of all; that the opinion of the many developed by a free discussion is wiser than the opinion of a few wise men unenlightened by public discussion; that government has other functions than that merely of protecting the nation from other nations and the individual from other individuals. It already does much more than this: it deepens the rivers; it lights the coasts; it dredges the harbors; it supervises the incoming of immigrants; it has a large share in the management of the currency; it carries our letters, and will, let us hope, before long carry our telegraphic and telephonic messages; and it administers the greatest, if not the best, popular educational system in the world. In all these things the brotherhood acts for itself, in the faith that the nation possesses a corporate interest, a corporate intelligence, and a corporate will. How far may this corporate action be carried? Only experiment can answer that question. But this we may say with confidence: that the city, the State, and the nation have each a right to do whatever the people can better do for themselves, through their political organization, than they can hire done by private enterprise.

An age in which each individual is at liberty to work out his own economic problem for himself is far better than an age in which he is driven to his task by the whip of a master. But an age in which each individual sees that his economic problem is in its essential elements the same as that of his neighbor, that their interests are bound together in a common interest, and that they are best served by combination and co-operation, not by a self-seeking competition, is far better than either the age of industrial paternalism or that of industrial individualism. And this is the age upon which we are now entering. A hundred and forty thousand coal-miners of different races, languages, and religious faiths combine in a common effort for their common welfare. It is true that they combine only to promote the interests of the class; that they have formed, not a human brotherhood, but a class brotherhood. But this is an advance on an age in which each individual sought only his own interest in disregard of the interests of his neighbor. Thousands of small capitalists combine their savings in corporate funds for their common welfare. The corporation has been denounced as an instrument for the concentration of wealth. It is not. It is a modern contrivance by which wealth is concentrated for advantage in administration and distributed for the enjoyment of profits. The tendency of corporations, despite the imperfect fraternalism of this opening of the century, is toward the distribution rather than toward the concentration of wealth. Mr. William Grinnell, in his "Social Theories and Social Facts," states that the Standard Oil Company when first organized had forty-five stockholders, and now has more than four thousand; that the sugar trust when first organized had three hundred shareholders, and now has over twelve thousand. In vain will individualism endeavor to prevent the combination of wealth in great corporations and the combination of labor in great labor unions. The day of industrial individualism is passing away, the day of industrial fraternalism has already dawned. What is needed in industry is not a return to the discarded individualism of the past, but an advance to a more perfect and a more inclusive fraternalism in the future — a fraternalism in which the motto, An injury to one is an injury to all, and a benefit to one is a benefit to all, will be the motto, not of a class, but of the entire community; in which not merely laborer will unite with laborer and capitalist with capitalist, but also laborer and capitalist will unite in a common undertaking for their common benefit; in which laborers will understand that capital, whoever owns it, cannot pay wages unless the business is profitable, and capitalists will understand that there can be no profitable market unless the laborer receives good wages; in which the producer will understand that he is also a consumer, and the consumer will understand that he is also a producer; in which every man will look, not only on his own things, but also on the things of his neighbor; and in which the direction and control by the people in their sovereign capacity will be superior to the control by any class, however powerful. In brief, the remedy for great combinations, whether of capital or labor, is not their dissolution, but their co-operation under the regulation of a still greater combination — that of all the people, acting through the State and National governments.

There are belated men in industry who believe that in industrial enterprises a few wise, rich, and strong men must rule and the many must be ruled; who believe that the brains of industry belong to the few and the muscles of industry to the many. They do not believe in autocracy in church or in State, but they still cling to autocracy in industry. These men, whatever their temporary success, belong in the seventeenth century, not in the twentieth. There are other men who believe that the panacea for all industrial evils is free competition — competition between combinations as formerly it was competition between individuals. They would trust to competing railways to secure railway rate legislation; to competing sugar and tobacco and paper and oil corporations to keep down the prices and to keep up the quality of the sugar, tobacco, paper, and oil. They belong to the first half of the nineteenth century. The age of the future is an age of fraternalism — an age which recognizes a common interest in industry, and which promotes co-operation to secure that industry; an age of great corporations and combinations of great corporations; of great labor unions and of combinations of great labor unions. We have already passed from the era of mere individual consciousness to that of class consciousness; we are to go on from the age of class consciousness to that of community consciousness. The workingman recognizes a brother in his neighbor workingman; the capitalist recognizes a brother in his neighbor capitalist. The remedy for the evils incidental to class organization and class consciousness is not an impossible return to individualism; it is a possible advance to that era of fraternalism in which every man will recognize in his neighbor a brother man, and in which the motto, An injury to one is an injury to all, will be adopted, not merely by the labor unions in their war against capitalism, nor merely by capitalists in their war against labor, but by the entire community in their common effort for mutual peace and universal prosperity.

In the religious realm the age in which every man is free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, or not to worship him at all, is far better than an age in which men adopt a creed without thinking about it, and a worship without really entering into it, because both creed and worship have been forced upon them by superior authority. But this religious liberty is not the end; beyond it is that religious condition of life in which we recognize a spiritual unity underneath our varying creeds and a spiritual faith underneath our varying forms of worship.

There are in our time a few belated men who are endeavoring to compel us to accept their thoughts, or those of the fathers as formulated in the creeds of the church, not because they are demonstrably true but because they are traditional. Occasionally they succeed in driving a dissenter out of their church, and at the same time and by the same process induce the public to purchase his books. Formerly the way to suppress a book was to put it on the index expurgatorius; now this is the way to promote its circulation. There are more men who are content merely to live at peace with their neighbors, like monks in separate cells. The Puritan no longer prosecutes the Quaker because he chooses to go to a Quaker meeting-house, to worship in silence; the Episcopalian no longer attempts to drive the Puritan into a cathedral, to worship with a prayer-book. This is an advance over the past; but there is something better in the age which is coming.

The age of the future is that of a catholic faith and a practical co-operation; an age in which every believer will respect the faith of his neighbor; an age in which all men will recognize the truth of Paul's statement, We know in fragments and we prophesy in fragments, and will believe that there is something in every fragment necessary to complete the whole truth. In this coming age catholicity of faith will supplant toleration, as toleration has supplanted bigotry. The age in which I hate my neighbor's faith is gone; that in which I regard his faith with religious indifference which I call tolerance is going; that in which I respect his faith and work with him to a common end is coming in. A few weeks ago, at the International Arbitration Conference held at Lake Mohonk, there participated prominent leaders in the Jewish, the Unitarian, the Quaker, the Puritan, the Episcopal, and the Roman Catholic communions; and morning prayers were conducted on successive mornings by Cardinal Gibbons of the Roman Catholic Church, Bishop McVickar of the Episcopal Church, myself of the Congregational Church, while the Scripture was read by Mr. Smiley, a Friend. Such a spiritual fellowship is characteristic of the Lake Mohonk Conferences, and is prophetic of the spiritual unity of the future.

Each age has its peculiar virtues and its peculiar vices. The virtues and the vices of the age into which you young men are going are those produced by the age of individualism which we are leaving behind. The age of despotism was one of repression; that of individualism was one of emancipation. It let loose an enormous amount of human energy which had before lain inactive and unsuspected. In this it conferred upon humanity an incalculable benefit. But with this energy, and partly because of it, it incited three vices — the three vices which have been characteristic of American life in the nineteenth century. In the realm of industry, individualism said to every man, "The old restraints are taken away; you are free; seek your own interests and those of your immediate family; enter the competitive race; the best man shall get the prize; the prize is what he can get by his industry." Thus individualism developed the ambition of acquisitiveness. The evil of multi-millionaires is not that only a few men have enormous fortunes, it is that money has been made the measure of success, that the same letters U. S. stand as the symbol of our currency and of our national life. In the political realm individualism said to every man, "The object of law is to protect each man's rights: do not violate that law; otherwise you are to do what is right in your own eyes." It took off from men the external restraints of government; it did little to impose on them the spiritual restraints of conscience. Thus it promoted in America the lawlessness of self-will. The evil of the mob lynching the defenseless negro, and of the coal barons of Pennsylvania combining in violation of law that they may lower the cost of production and raise the price of coal, is not merely that in one case a perhaps criminal negro is burned to death, and that in the other a defenseless community comes perilously near a coal famine; it is that the laws alike of God and of man are trampled under foot, and the self-will of the individual, obedient to his blind passion in the one case and his scarcely less blind self-interest in the other, is made the sole law for the regulation of life. In the realm of religion individualism said, "Religion is simply a matter between yourself and your God; your neighbor has no concern with your faith and you have no concern with your neighbor's faith." Thus individualism developed the irreverence of self-conceit. For he who begins with contemptuous indifference for his neighbor's faith is liable to end with contemptuous indifference for all faith. He who has no reverence for his fellow-man will not long preserve reverence for God.

If, young men, you are to be leaders in the age upon which you are entering, you must understand its essential spirit. You must comprehend the age from which we are passing and the age into which we are entering. You must recognize both the vices and the virtues which we have inherited from the age of individualism, and seek to preserve the virtues and to conquer the vices. You must realize that the age of paternalism is gone, that the age of individualism is fast going, and that he who would be a leader of his people must understand what the age of fraternalism means. In the realm of industry you must seek to substitute the ambition of achievement for the ambition of acquisitiveness, and make the standard of your success the quality of service you can render the community, not the degree of compensation you can get from it. In the political realm you must recognize that the State is a person, and that its prosperity depends upon its public spirit, its public intelligence, and its public conscience. And by your own life and influence you must seek to substitute for the lawlessness of self-will a law whose inspiration is the public conscience and the public intelligence, and whose end is the public welfare. In the realm of religion you must see that there is truth in all creeds, reverence in all forms of worship, some spirit of goodness and inspiration in all men. So for the irreverence of self-conceit you must seek to substitute a reverence for God, founded upon respect for the honest convictions and the sincere purposes of his children. For as the ambition of acquisitiveness, the lawlessness of self-will, and the irreverence of self-conceit are the vices of that individualism which is miscalled democracy, so ambition to serve the brotherhood, loyalty to the will and welfare of the brotherhood, respect for the faith and worship of the brotherhood, are the essential conditions of that fraternalism which is the consummation of democracy.

BACCALAUREATE HYMN

BY CHARLES TRIPP RYDER

THE loveliness of dawn is passed away,
The morning star glides upward and departs,
Here on the threshold of the greater day
Lift we our song to Him who knows our hearts.

Grant us this last and greatest gift of all,
Courage to stand before our life alone,
To keep our faces forward till we fall,
And ask no hands to help us but our own.

The time grows short, the near world calls aloud;
Through its deep wilderness and pathways long,
O Thou, who in the might of fire and cloud
Leadest Thy people on, may we be strong!

CLASS DAY EXERCISES

JUNE 22, 1906

CLASS ORATION

BY ARTHUR CAMPBELL BLAGDEN

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, FELLOW CLASSMATES — Class Day is a particularly pleasant occasion. Thoughts of degrees hoped for and degrees to be received are not in order. Studies are given their proper place in our parting exercises, but they need not trouble us to-day. Other Class Days have been and will be, but to-day, Fellow Classmates, is our day. To-day we celebrate, and to-day we hand on our colors. We have spent our allotted period in this University of 270 years, and we pass on to make room for others. May they in their turn carry with them memories as pleasant as those we take with us!

There are new and inspiring experiences awaiting us. On the other hand it is hard not to linger a little over the days just passed. In a way it seems that just as we are beginning to understand Harvard and her ways the University has done with us. The proportionate value of things, of studies, athletics, and so on, get clearer, and our course is over.

During our Senior year there has been wide discussion of athletics. Not long ago there occurred an incident which throws some light on Intercollegiate Sports. In an intercollegiate golf match a player lost his ball. He hunted for it for five minutes but without success. As soon as the umpire had declared the hole forfeited his opponent said: "There is your ball; I could not show it to you before, because I was playing for my college." In contrast to this is an episode of an important lawn-tennis match between two of the best players in the country. The linesman called a ball "out." The player saw the linesman had not been looking, and that the ball had really landed "in." He refused to take the point.

We have heard a great deal about the inordinate desire to win. Most of what we have heard does not mean much to a college man. He enjoys games more than calisthenics because of the element of rivalry; the excitement of a contest appeals to him. If this were not so he would not care much about games. Just as he wants to overcome his rivals he wants the college to which he belongs to overcome hers. There would be no games worth playing if men did not want to win. Moreover it would be a false diagnosis to say that the tennis player proved a better sportsman than the golf player because he was less determined to win. It is not hard to be unselfish if it costs nothing and looks well. According to the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table to be a good sportsman is "to brag little, to show well, to crow gently when in luck; to own up, to pay up, and to shut up when beaten." To have this apply to him a man must want to win. The point is the tennis player did not want to win less, but there were other things he valued more. This is no mere quibble. A man does not know how to stifle his desire to win. It does little good to tell him not to be so anxious for victory, but it is not so meaningless to say men should develop a greater appreciation of the qualities which make the tennis player worth following. We don't want a law, "Thou shalt not desire to win," but we do not need a higher standard in athletic ethics.

We lack sound athletic traditions. Changes in the golf rules will not make a man generous if he thinks his duty to his college demands his acting in a way he would consider despicable in an individual. It ought not to be long, however, before men realize that when they are playing as representatives of their colleges it behooves them to be as generous as possible. This will not be realized, however, before the colleges which they represent take a broader attitude toward sport. Consider for a moment our methods. When a man feels that he cannot make the 'Varsity it does not occur to him to play on some scrub team. The way we try to help the teams is not by playing on minor teams ourselves so that there will be a larger field of selection. Instead we express our enthusiasm by organized cheering. It has been said that religion should consist of service rather than services. It might also be said that college spirit should consist of doing something rather than in making a noise. Where our traditions are weak is in the fact that while the college at large is, of course, interested in the teams, interest in athletics is not enough developed. The tendency, therefore, is to care for the actual result, but not to care about the playing. This is the difference between the golf player and the tennis player. Both cared about the result; the tennis player, however, cared about the playing as well, while the golf player did not. The first was intent on proving himself a better tennis player than his opponent. Any unfair advantage would make the test worthless. The second wanted to win, and was ready to snatch at any advantage.

That our attitude has much in common with that of the golf player is shown by the way we regard cheering. We go to matches not to see whether our team can play a better game than our opponent's, but to help Harvard win. While the team is learning plays we are practising cheering. The cheering must be directed carefully. In football it is bad to cheer when our side has the ball, because signals may be confused; but when the other side has the ball, signals are of no consequence. In baseball the demand for cheering comes when our team is at bat. Usually it seems that the cheering is effective chiefly in rattling the opposing pitchers. Now it may be that this system does help Harvard's chances. The point is that games won this way are not worth winning. Baseball ought not to be changed from a contest in skill, and quick judgment between two teams, into a trial of the lung capacity of two universities.

Not to cheer because we felt no interest would argue a deplorable situation. But we shall not have generosity in intercollegiate athletics until we pay more attention to the real game, and cease trying to introduce elements which have no logical place in an athletic contest. To ask that the spectators should sit perfectly quiet during a match would be ridiculous. There is, however, a vast difference between the organized cheer with its ulterior purpose and the spontaneous cheer aroused by a good play.

Organized cheering, however, is not the root of our athletic difficulties. It is the idea behind the cheering which is at fault. It is not to be wondered that under the present circumstances men when playing on college teams make use of tricks and underhand devices they would be ashamed to use in an individual match. There is great desire in the college at large to win. The college does not care particularly about the game itself; it is willing to win by cheering, if the team can't win by skill. So the golf player is at a premium, and the tennis player is below par.

If, instead of being content with cheering, more of us played on scrub teams, would not the situation be improved? In the first place, a well-managed scrub team would be very good fun. It would also develop men who might be of use to the 'Varsity. But, more important than either of these considerations, it would make more of us understand what it means for a man who is fagged not to play a little less hard than he can. We should realize that our encouragement to the team must be given before the game; that the match itself must be played by the men on the field. The actual playing would be more closely watched. We should know more how the positions should be played, and there would be more interest in how they were played. The value of generosity in sport would be more appreciated, for we should know by experience how evasion of the spirit of the rules mars a game. If the college at large had more of this point of view not so many men would think they were working for the honor of their college when they refused to help an opponent find a lost golfball or shifted a football forward when the referee was not looking.

If as graduates the class of 1906 tries to encourage more general participation in athletics on the part of the undergraduates, their efforts will be well directed. Athletics are rightly regarded as an important part of a man's training, but they will not accomplish much if we simply watch others play or try to cheer them to victory.

In the years to come the value of our training will be tested. If we care for the work we shall have to do, as well as for the success the work may bring, whether we win or lose, the game will be worth playing. In the past few years we have had advantages shared by comparatively few. These advantages we have had through the generosity of men who believed the country needs men with Harvard training. We have not begun to pay for our training; it is a trust committed to our charge. Harvard graduates have been described as men who in peace stand firmest for the public honor and renown, and in war ride first into the murderous thickets. It is no light task to maintain this standard; but, Fellow Classmates, we have received our trust; we may not falter.

CLASS POEM

BY JULIAN HINCKLEY

O Alma Mater, unto thee we bring
What tribute save our tears that we depart,
What thanks save those unspoken of the heart?
Thy bells of holiday that joyous ring,
We who go forth forever hear with pain,
Knowing the days that ne'er shall come again.

To-morrow comes and with it length of years,
When, looking back along the lapse of time,
We shall recall bright visions and sublime
Desires that were tempered not with fears;
And the old singing of the heart once more
Shall echo youth and days long gone before.

Old friends, old voices, happiest of faces
Shall never pass from out our memory,
But ever claim the heart's true sympathy
Amid the darkest hours and steepest places,
And through whatever years there are to be
Shall ever bear us goodly company.

Ambitions we have satisfied, and those
For which we strove and failed alike are done,
And joy of memory of both is one.
Of deeper things our pride, for in the close
Of these our years, O mother, we have seen
The true significance of what has been.

Not pedant wisdom dost thou teach; far higher
And fuller are thy precepts. Thou hast taught
The strength of life that in no books is sought,
The truer friendship, worthier desire.
The world grows old, age laughs at age, and ever Knowledge and creeds must change — these teachings never!

Thou in thy years hast seen what thousands go
In silence and in pride beneath thy gates!
And generation upon generation waits
The heritage thou only canst bestow!
Yet to us each is given to bear thy name
With those thy legion sons who won it fame.

For we go ways that part; with various toil
We must pursue our various ends; to each
A different cup of life. Yet e'er the moil
And tumult of the world to thee we reach
That goblet and we pledge that drink to thee,
O Alma Mater, through the years to be!

IVY ORATION

BY CHARLES DAVIS MORGAN

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, FELLOW STUDENTS — no, that 's a little formal, — I won't call you students because I know you so well; fellows:

I think you 've come down here under a misunderstanding; this is not going to be an i v oration; but, in honor of the class of six, a v i oration.

As I stand friendless in this vast arena I can think of myself only as the lonely football, as it has been accustomed to lie on this great field — a thick-skinned void pumped full of rapid air, surrounded by a desperate throng ready to fall upon it from every side.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have been basely betrayed. With great forethought I had carefully formed an organized laughing squad, both for your relief and for mine; but the leader has had the treachery to read my oration to his men at 6.30 o'clock last evening: they declared a general strike, asserting that the Union would not allow them to serve as a weeping-squad, and still less as a bucket-brigade; for as you know, the Union is a dry institution, and it saw immediately that this was going to be a wet class day.

But, at any rate, I give you greetings. I welcome you safe across the river yonder, over the rickety little "Bridge of Sighs" — (of small size!). Welcome to this historic structure of fake granite, this fine old fire-proof stadium of mud and asbestos, built years ago in the days of "mass-play" and "unnecessary roughness," when Blakeney was at his zenith, and Moran was yet unheard of. Can you fail to be impressed by these gray, crumbling ruins, battered by the "axes" of the Yale death-rattle cheer, within whose walls the flower of American manhood struggled for pugilistic supremacy, while against those walls sat the flower of American womanhood (by that I don't mean "wall-flowers," ladies) vying with each other in a no less artful contest of crimson gowns and flaring millinery. But this struggle of the "buds" and hat-makers must be called off, I am afraid. Those marvellous bonnets, picture hats, Gainsboroughs, toques and stuffed birds, behind which the Freshmen twist and stretch in vain endeavors to see the field, are an obstruction to the public view, and therefore illegal under the "Screen Law."

This law, blue with the blue mold of centuries, was passed by act of the Commonwealth in the year 1622, to prevent Miles Standish from erecting a fort in front of "Ye Olde Plymouth in Shoppe," "which," said the Pilgrim fathers, "being ye onlie such shoppe on ye Western Hemisphere, should be in open sight of God, and of easy access to all men."

Perhaps these sporty old Puritans could have helped us on the football question. Our poor old friend football! Into the Turkish Baths of Public Opinion he has been dragged, foul and mud-smirched, together with beef packers and life-insurance officers; and at last he has emerged, thoroughly cleansed, but oh how weakened by the treatment, — the slaps, the pounding, and the volumes of hot air to which he has been subjected. But there's no doubt that he'll be on the field next fall, when we are going to lick the Elis. We only missed it last year by the skin of . . . by the skin of the pig, so to speak, — but that was just another case of Yale's luck — the "Luck of Roaring Camp."

But it is n't very safe for me to say much about next fall's game, for the Rules Committee have gradually been tormented into that state of mind in which they are liable to shoot on sight — and I'm not taking any more chances than I have to, during the ivy season. Do you know, those men are heroes: their position is almost as unenviable as mine, or the Czar of Russia's. In fact, Nicholas and I are talking seriously of admitting them to our Martyrs' Club. Why take this question of "unnecessary roughness," — they're all in the dark, for the subject is so blinding that even the officials close their eyes to it, and the players have their eyes closed by it.

Now as to the game's dying out at Harvard, kept alive as it is by the buoyant vitality of thousands of American youths, — it's as ridiculous as the man with cork arms drowning himself. And, if football were abolished, to what possible use could we put the Stillman Infirmary?

No, football will not be abolished; but it's quite easy to trace its future modification along scientific lines. Three years ago the game was played on a gridiron, and very naturally began to be roasted; for the last two seasons it has adopted a differently marked field, — and what a chequered career it has had! Now if the field continues to be changed, there seems only one evolution possible — the circular shape, which might be introduced with wonderful effect in the form of the roulette wheel. Picture to yourself the soul-stirring result. Here are five hundred acres of cultivated "specked-potatoes"; one thousand bushels of their eyes are planted upon this field, on which is marked a huge circle, cut into many numbered segments. On either side stand the eleven luckiest gamblers of the contesting universities, in flesh colored tights from neck to heel, with crimson or blue silk puffings about the loins. There they stand, recklessly gambling away the tainted millions of the gate receipts. Conceive the excitement when the Harvard "right win-back" stakes his last thousand against frightful odds. The Yale "left behind" hurls the so-called football of polished ivory into the ring. Then a roar bursts from the Harvard side: we have won, and on the luckiest number in arithmetic — the number "6." How beneficial such a training! for would it not foster in our young men the strongest of our national proclivities — our passion for “ frenzied finance ” ?

This brings me very naturally to a little financial announcement I want to make. After the services a contribution will be taken up for the Gore Hall Dynamite Fund. This is not a sinking fund, for it will be employed in raising that building to the skies, and, furthermore, in razing it to the ground. But it must not be forgotten that, before this titanic wedding cake may be happily erased from the map of the yard, some sort of a shanty must be built in which the 900 instructors and 13 students, who use Gore Hall, may do their reading. Checks may be made out to the Harvard Athletic Association, a banking house, which has secretly tided the University over many a financial crisis, and with which all the cash at Harvard is yearly deposited. I mention this only to save time — your money would find its way there sooner or later, at any rate.

We have also a thousand and two other needs that will meet your purse half way. Such are: a Greek theatre, where Agamemnon might hang up his hat and really feel at home; and then — a new bell for Harvard Hall: the one there now is too loud — it wakes you up.

But, nevertheless, we have been fortunate during the past year in coming in for some very substantial additions to our plant. In September, for example, we received from the right-minded parents of the United States some 700 contributions to a new Freshman class, — a body which has now passed away. But the better half has risen, — not necessarily to a higher life, but only to the “ high-life ” of the Sophomore or leisure class.

We have had a number of very fine temporary acquisitions in the form of distinguished visitors. We have had as University preachers, for example, some of the most eminent churchmen of the Anglo-Saxon world; but it was the good fortune of the Cercle Français to entertain a great French divine — the “ Divine ” Sarah, who did indeed lead us to worship. Metaphorically speaking, Mme. Bernhardt opened wide those wonderful arms of hers, and in flocked the Cercle. She even had the generosity to risk an eclipse of her powers by inviting them all to take part in her performances. They made splendid tin soldiers, and when one cried in classic French with a Sever Hall accent: "To the stake with the witch!" there was wild applause — from the front row. As for Sarah, she acted like sixty — sixty-three, to be more exact.

But when she left we hardly felt her loss, for her divine mantle fell quite naturally upon the shoulders of another celebrity — John the Orangeman — whose life has been as long and quite as full as hers. In nature, we see first the budding flower and then the fruit; in John we find her scheme reversed: first the golden fruit and then the budding genius.

In the course of the winter another very famous personage paid us a peculiar attention. Perhaps you don't know that "Jack the Snipper," the lightning tonsorial artist, made one of his biggest hauls in the very midst of Radcliffe — thirty-five braids and ten Janice Meredith curls. I certainly admire that man's nerve. But, poor fellow, he was jolly well fooled when he attempted business on Radcliffe's president!

Now let us feast our eyes upon a more permanent acquisition, — and not only our eyes, but our stomachs: for the directors of Memorial Hall, not content with the fame already acquired by that highly imaginative pile of late Gothic (the very last thing in Gothic, I should think) have added thereto a majestic extension, — thus increasing the yearly death rate of the institution by some 200 students and 3,000 chipped beefs. Concerning this work of construction — or rather, destruction — the Crimson so aptly remarked in its world-renowned editorial style:

"Since the architects engaged for the plans are the equals if not the peers of any in the country, nothing which may be done will impair the artistic effect of the original building." The Crimson made a safe guess — nothing could.

Don't think me trivial, ladies and gentlemen, for I am sincerely trying to point out a few of Harvard's advantages. The chief reason for her preëminence, however, is her great elective system. Think of the variety it offers! You can take a course in the Classics and explore dead languages, or you can take a course in Hygiene, and explore dead cats. You might call both of these stiff corses. And again, you can specialize in Zoölogy and learn how you exist, you can take any amount of Philosophy and wonder why you exist, or you can take German A and wish you did n't exist.

But why waste time in defending a system, when nowadays there's nothing so fashionable as attacking anything that bears the odious name of "system" — whether it be the work of magnates or professors — it's pretty much the same thing: for, while the magnates bore the earth in seeking oil to burn, the professors burn the oil, in seeking to bore the earth. So, fired with resentment at having once been flunked in a snap course, and armed with my little muck-rake, I intend to deal this educational octopus a stunning blow, and retire to private life.

The most rankling grievance against which we degree-snatchers must protest is the yearly deception we undergo in choosing our courses.

I appeal to you, gentlemen of the Corporation, Board of Overseers, Administrative Board, Parietal Board, and any other boards mentioned in the Catalogue; and to all ye men with the happy faculty for arts and sciences: why not charge us by the course, and guide our gambling choice by grading your prices according to the difficulty of the subject? In this way, all the cinch courses, including the Anthropologies, Egyptologies, Fine Arts, and Indo-Wanians, would command as much as $50.00; the great mass of serious but interesting learning would be listed at from $10.00 to $25.00; and the brutally instructive courses like Economics I, from 15 to 30 cents. Of course there would be fluctuations of price, as in the market of any other commodity. Large bargain sale signs would be posted on University Hall. For example: "Damaged Goods Sale — Philosophy 17 — marked down to $1.98." The loafers would look askance and move on, but the grind would rush in with the keen anticipation of something nice and stiff. Then, when the office had something new and tempting to offer, we should see something like this: "Fancy Fall Furnishings for Fallen Freshmen — Hindoostanee 13 & 16 — Special Price to Probationists — only $68.00 — Money refunded if you fail." That course would have to be given here in the Stadium to accommodate the crowd.

You may be glad to know that I am forced to stop now. The fact is, the United States Inspectors, who are nosing about for spoiled products, have discovered that stale goods are being offered here; and they're scenting me out. So, good-by!

Oh! I forgot to announce that this is souvenir day. Every lady and gentleman will receive, on leaving, a small boutonnière of ivy, made up in two styles — plain and poisoned. Take the latter, and have good reason to remember this inflammatory speech.

CLASS ODE

BY HENRY ADAMS BELLOWS

WE have journeyed to thee from the ends of the earth;
Thou hast brought the clear day out of night,
With the strength of our fathers, whose might was thy birth,
And whose faith is thy radiant light.
We reap where they sowed; their toil is our gain;
We rejoice through their hopes and their fears;
We are strong in the sorrow of ages of pain,
And the might of invincible years.

Now the morning leaps up from the rim of the world,
And we stand face to face with the day;
The brave banner of dawn through the sky is unfurled; —
We must go, for it calls us away.
The treasures that years have laid in our care
We may hold but to give them again;
Shall we fail, in the glory that thrills through the air?
We are strong; let us rise and be men.

LATIN ORATION

“AT HAEC STUDIA ADULESCENTIAM ALUNT, SENECTUTEM OBLECTANT”

Cic. Pro. Arch.

BY OTIS JOHNSON TODD

VIXIMUS, studuimus, gavisī sumus in hac universitate iam annos quattuor; mox sumus hinc discessuri. Venimus huc hodie ut priusquam abeamus rite hanc nostram ultimam celebremus festivitatem. Initio igitur nos iuniores, quibus supremum ad diem disciplinae in hoc loco amoeno perventum est, vos, doctores et amici, in itinera vitae singula exituri salutamus.

Tibi primo, rector et decus nostrae academiae, salutem pro condiscipulis meis pluriman dico. Quod tam diu et tam bene eam gubernas tibi omnes nos gratulamur.

Et te, magistratum huius civitatis principem creatum saluto, qui quod ipse te litteris studiisque liberalibus olim hic conferebas, immo anni viginti quinque omnino sunt cum diploma tuum ab hac universitate accepisti, quasi familiaris es, Tiresias, vinculo nobis consociatus et quadam cognatione.

Te, hospes noster, maioribus tuis astronomia praeclaris dignam prolem saluto libentissime. Nec solum scientia tua nobis adiunctus es, sed quod universitatum legatus ad nos es missus Germanarum, quibus nobiscum mutatio professorum effecta est annua, etiam artioribus vinctus es vinculis.

Vos quoque salvete qui et studiis favetis nostris et ipsi gubernatores estis huic discentium multitudini. Diu vivatis consiliisque vestris huic Musarum sedi semper prositis.

Deinde vos, praeceptores amici, iubeo salvere. Nostri diu fuistis magistri, nunc alios habetis alumnos, qui vobis commissi sunt ut provideatis ne quid capiant detrimenti. Vostrium tres absunt, qui consiliis, benignitate, virtute notiores in hac academia versabantur; mors tamen rapax uno anno eos nobis abstulit. Sed nec aetate decesserunt immatura nec priusquam opera perfecissent plurima. Memoriam suam nobis reliquerunt, exempla vitae singularia, desiderium magnum.

Quod vos, parentes nostri et maiores cognatique, adestis gaudio complemur maximo. Vobis si quid gratum, patres matresque, ex hoc spectaculo evenerit, merito quidem continget, satisque nobis erit.

Nec amicorum oblitus sum ceterorum: vobis enim, viri matronaeque, praesentibus laetamur. Et vos, O puellae, — sed quid plura? “Quas di diligunt,” — nos quoque necesse est diligamus.

Et apud vos, sodales mei, perpauca velim dicere. Triste fere nonnullis videtur tam multos ex universitate sua cum exierint omnino se a studiis liberalibus ad opera scilicet seria convertere. Neque immerito. Tantum a me abest ut parvi negotia aestimem ut tamquam fundamenta ea rerum civitatis secundarum confitear. Sed ut curtae aedes et imperfectae videantur si quae a substructione tantum consistant, ita non fundamenta modo illa verum etiam reliquae vitae partes et ornamenta iure requiruntur. Cuius rei nimis saepe obliti negotia petimus, pecuniam conflamus, humaniora studia omnia fere praetermittimus.

At quidnam tam diu in hac schola morati sumus? An ut aeternum aliquid adipisceremur quod ipsum per se nobiscum per vitam permaneret? Nihil persuasum est mihi integrum in nobis victurum esse nisi adsidue suppeditet unde alatur. Nec secus nos si hanc doctrinam volumus remanere recolendo debemus eam conservare.

Praeterea quid hoc potius ad hanc “Almam Matrem” nos reliatos tenebit! Non enim ut semel hinc discesserimus ab hac seiungemur; Harvardiani semper futuri sumus. Quare vinculo quodam et communi hoc studio adsidue decet nos ad eam adiungi, cum ea consentire.

Non laudo ego nunc haec studia; nec a me est opus laudibus. Non vindice ea quidem egent, nullum desiderant; multos habent et bonos. Verum si quid aliud illud moneam et cohorter: cum ab hac vita scholastica absoluti erimus ne rationem vitae totam mutemus; quae hic coluimus studia ne tunc omnino neglegamus, sed interdum diutius moremur in hoc negotio et grato et dulci curando. Itaque totos desinamus nos in lucra et negotia dedere, atque paucis quidem sed optimis contenti gaudiis, litterati homines et nostra et huius nostrae academiae causa semper existamus.

DISSERTATION

FAITH, THE PERMANENT ELEMENT OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT

BY ARTHUR EVANS WOOD

To Harvard men who have been interested in the religious life of the University it is evident that the religion of college students is mainly one of activity. The most strongly supported undergraduate religious interest is philanthropy. As a rule men will tell you what they think about religious problems in less time than it takes them to tell you what they will do for social service. The extreme practicality of such religion has its advantages. Good deeds such as leading boys' clubs, and giving concerts in the slums, are the results of pure religion, and their kindly light shines into the dark corners of the world. A religion of social service, moreover, is an ethical expression of American utilitarianism. Yet this practical attitude is not without its disadvantages. A religion of pure activity without spiritual and intellectual convictions involves a danger which may in the end cause that activity to be less efficient. Philanthropy is a result of religious ideals, and therefore must in the long run suffer from the intellectual despair of men who say "it makes little difference what we think."

Besides this class, and that fortunately smaller body of men who are interested in the theoretical problems of religion almost to the exclusion of "works," there appear to be two groups: one whose thought has led them into sincere skepticism; another whose religious thought, while undergoing adjustment to a deeper knowledge and broader culture, has led them to a larger faith. The needs of this latter group have been met, on the one hand, by the dignified simplicity of the services in Appleton Chapel, and, on the other hand, by the University courses on the philosophy of religion. One of these avowedly aims at the reconstruction of the system of Christian doctrine. Such reconstruction as is now taking place under the guidance of modern religious leaders is evolutionary, retaining the good, and avoiding the mistakes of the past in an effort to make the religion of the twentieth century more vital.

This readjustment, moreover, recognizes that our ideal life has a two-fold source, — Greek and Jewish. Our intellectual culture we can trace to its beginnings among the Greeks; but for the sources of our moral and spiritual ideas we must look to the Jews. To the Greeks God was an ideal of the intellect: to the Jews, an experience of the heart.

“The pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night departed not from before the people.”

Aristotle was born in Greece: Jesus in Judea. The mingling of Greek and Jewish culture in the world was the signal for theological dispute. This history of the church repeats itself in our own minds as we endeavor to rationalize our religious longings. There are moments in our lives when the demands of the head are not stilled by the assurances of the heart, and happy is he who at such times always keeps his faith.

Goethe said that

“The universe divided by the human reason leaves a remainder.”

That something left over by our logic is the explanation of religion. This does not mean that reason has no part in religion. On the contrary, religion has always suffered from the absence of reason, and gained by its purifying presence. Goethe's epithet means, rather, that, after we have proceeded as far as possible in the analysis of life, there still remains one great, mysterious fact — Life itself. This mystery religion interprets. To the indwelling Power which sustains life it ascribes goodness and brooding care for the higher destinies of man. Hence religion pertains not to the surface, but to the heart of existence. If it expresses truth at all, its truth is vital, essential as the sun to the life and activities of men. The adjustment of our faith to the scientific concepts of our age is a matter of great but of secondary importance; for at best our knowledge is incomplete, and the truth which knowledge seeks is itself an object of our faith.

But what is faith? In the past, faith has been defined as a willing ascription to a formal and logical assertion as to the ways of God with man. The inadequacy of such assertions, however, has been shown in two ways: they have failed to satisfy the religious needs of the masses of the people, and they have failed to harmonize with the progress of scientific knowledge. From these facts, which most thoughtful people will admit, two conclusions may be drawn: Either faith has gone with the passing of religious creeds, or, notwithstanding the loss of creeds, faith exists, and we need to have it newly defined. Of these alternatives the latter is the true one. In spite of the unpopularity of creeds faith remains, because no man could live and work a day without some latent spark of it: Faith is a belief that the world of our ideal exists, and that it may progressively be realized by each of us in daily experience.

Remembering that faith postulates a real, ideal world, and that the empiric value of faith is the measure of its worth, we are now led to consider just what is the necessary content of such faith. I say necessary, for an ideal world must by its very nature satisfy the nobler hopes of men. Judging from their needs, one comprehensive ideal of faith would be a possibility for progressive freedom from the limits of matter, time, and space. Failure to understand the mystery involved in these qualities of the natural world has always been a source of grief. Shakspeare's lament,

"Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate
That Time will come and take my love away," has been echoed by thousands. But a slavish dependence of human happiness upon the vicissitudes of Time could not be a condition of an ideal world. Hence faith is the reality of an ideal world and must of necessity transcend the limits of a world of Time. "The Christian Gospel," says Harnack, "gives eternal life in the midst of Time." Here we are brought to the problem of Immortality, and since belief in this is man's greatest act of faith we must consider its validity.

On this subject the last two discussions of particular interest to Harvard men have been by men of science, and have practically denied the perpetuity of the individual human spirit. Professor Münsterberg in his book "The Eternal Life," and Professor Ostwald in the Ingersoll lecture of this year, both concluded that, while man's influence persists, his personality becomes extinct. This conception has a melancholy attractiveness. It has the sternness of inexorable scientific law. Yet natural science is inherently incapable of giving us the final word upon Immortality, for the desire for it is a sphere of man's experience which logic can neither penetrate nor explain. We must then in all fairness ask if there is any testimony other than scientific. I believe there is, and that it comes as a necessary inference from a belief that we live in an ideal, moral world. The desire for the continuance of a merely independent and unrelated personality is not pure enough to bear its own fulfilment in a moral world. But if that desire is chastened until it becomes a wish to continue harmonizing and enlarging one's faculties for the good of all, then the chances are altogether in favor of its gratification in a moral world. For many this hope has life-giving power in the task of daily living. That is, it has the empiric value which the objects of faith should have. College men with their eyes open to the culture of the world have a deep foundation for happiness, and are therefore sometimes tempted to overlook the situation of thousands of uneducated men who would be other than they are. If the present sacrifice of these, toiling to maintain social and industrial conditions, while we attain a higher culture, is permanent and unrequited in the world order, then it seems time to ring down upon life a black curtain, and declare that for the majority of men the drama is a failure! But if, as Harnack suggests, present experience, even though bitter, is but one factor in the timeless growth of the soul, then all those bearing grievous burdens of the race, like the Roman slaves whom Paul addressed, may even here and now break forth into joy which comes with the present dawn of their immortality. Herein lies the deep ethical necessity of a belief in eternal life: It supplicates the Creator to give all opportunity to fulfil the moral and æsthetic purpose of their being, and in so doing assumes the existence of God. It does more, — it assumes an ideal moral world in which God is our Father.

Jesus first gave to men the idea of the Fatherhood of God, and it is ultimately this hope which leads us to think that in His house are many mansions for the progressing human spirit.

This belief in the power for unending growth does but express in other terms our faith in the existence of an ideal world which may be attested in experience. This belief or faith is, too, the substance of what Jesus taught, and with such faith he cast out human fears. If the American people are true to this faith, with their innate genius transforming faith into deeds they should become the saviors of the world.
